Happy Mother's Day: What greater gift might one generation give another than to offer understanding? D. S. Sommer

A family tree gives a visual picture of the relationships between generations. But to understand intergenerational relationships, family secrets, parents' hopes and children's dreams one must ask open and honest questions of the relatives on the family tree. In Happy Mother's Day we are introduced to Cara who tells her story through inner thoughts, feelings, hardships, successes and values. Happy Mother's Day provides an insightful intergenerational journey through time as Cara takes the reader on an exciting rollercoaster journey of intergenerational ups and downs with many twists and turns. The excitement is breath taking as the reader learns the meaning of motherhood from a mother's personal point of view with elaborate discussions and explanations from literature, scientific facts and fiction. We can laugh and cry with Cara as she asks poignant questions regarding how to deal with dysfunctional family members, how to support and encourage family members, and how to make motherhood a top priority. D. S. Sommer has successfully given the reader much to think about regarding motherhood. Regardless of age or gender, the reader will be delighted to see the connections to fictional women and historical times in understanding the role of women in families and society. Two interesting connections take the reader into the Victorian past with a discussion of Scarlett O'Hara from Gone with the Wind and then a jump into the apocalyptic future and the meaning of humanity from Blade Runner. The developmental process of moving from infancy to older adulthood is part of the life cycle. Just like a tree grows, matures, blooms and eventually dies the same is true of a family tree as it must weather the different storms and seasons. Through Cara's eyes, Happy Mother's Day allows the reader to personally understand with empathy the meaning of a family legacy.--Joe Weber, Ph.D., Past Chair, Department of Sociology, California State University, Fullerton
