This emotionally charged story plots the relationships of a 'close-knit group of individuals who irrevocably change one another's destinies.

Thomas Arthur Taylor, known to everyone as Tat, is the first of his family to spread his wings and leave the Upper Eden Valley in Cumbria. He is clever, excels at rugby and has a fine singing voice. From Appleby Grammar School he gains a place at University College London, to study law, shortly after the First World War.

Tat mixes with art students from The Slade School, who introduce him to a world he never knew existed. An exciting relationship develops with Jane Cranshaw, a beautiful upper class painting student, who he had previously regarded as unattainable. They fall in love and seem perfectly matched. However, he is unaware that Jane conceals a dark secret which fatally flaws the apparent innocence of their relationship.

Nothing in Tat's background prepares him for what is to come when their idyll is torn apart by a succession of emotional hammer blows. Tat and his best friend, Olly Sinclair, are engulfed in a whirlwind of turmoil and confusion.

Unexpectedly, Tat's magnificent singing voice proves to be his salvation.

Beautifully crafted, 'Beyond This Horizon' explores the timeless themes of friendship, art, love and loss. Above all, how the human spirit endures.

Praise for Beyond This Horizon:

'Beyond this Horizon' - the title of the book was well chosen!

The novel brought about feelings of nostalgia for a few group members with its colourful description of people and events. Group members reflected on how the Eden Valley environment and character were vividly portrayed.

The novel was enjoyed at many levels by the Group. For example, the development of the main characters captured our imagination, as did the contrasting lifestyles as we followed Tat on his life journey. Perhaps, the reader could identify with this in some way, either personally or through others.

We liked the way the narrative was easy to follow and written with sensitivity and humour. The emotionally charged story line maintained our interest throughout.

Generally it was seen as a good read and we look forward to reading the next book!

Doreen Cartmell - Kirkby Stephen Book Club

A delightful and very descriptive novel set early in the last Century of a gifted northern country boy who would usually be expected to leave school at an early age and join his parents and two older brothers to work on the remote family farm.

However, when his mother learns he has potential to pass the Grammar School examination, she has other ideas. The first obstacle is persuading her husband, but, together with her mother, they find ways and means of convincing him that Tat should be given the chance to go to Boarding School which in turn leads to University.

The book is well written and easy to read but difficult to put down. Eagerly awaiting the next stage of Tat's life in "An Inherited Voice".
